The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(e) the invention was described in a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention thereof by the applicant for patent, or on an international application by another who has fulfilled the requirements of paragraphs (1), (2), and (4) of section 371(c) of this title before the invention thereof by the applicant for patent.

The changes made to 35 U.S.C. 102(e) by the American Inventors Protection Act of 1999 (AIPA) do not apply to the examination of this application as the application being examined was not (1) filed on or after November 29, 2000, or (2) voluntarily published under 35 U.S.C. 122(b). Therefore, this application is examined under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) prior to the amendment by the AIPA (pre-AIPA 35 U.S.C. 102(e)).

Claims 1-15 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Saksena et al. ('726).

Claim 1: FIG. 2 of Saksena discloses the step of receiving a request (202) at an origin server (203) for a web page (204). The web page may reside at the origin server (203). As seen in FIG. 3, the document request which is sent to the server includes a path file (309). A sample pathfile is illustrated at column 7, lines 1-10. The pathfile defines a series of links that can link together individual pages (nodes) of a given URL address. Thus, the pages (nodes) and the links collectively act as a prefetch graph to define which documents on the URL are to be prefetched and retrieved to a local cache (col 3, lines 8-14 and col. 3, line 36). Web pages are selected for prefetching based on the existence of a link to that page and a weighting factor associated with each link.

Claim 2: Each link in the pathfile is a hypertext link.

Art Unit: 2175

Claim 3: Each link in the pathfile has a transaction weight.

Claim 4: The user who sends the request for the document changes the transaction weight. The user can use any logical criteria for deciding where to set the transaction weight, including consideration of server characteristics.

Claim 5: The transaction weight also reads identically as a “user weight”.

Claim 6: The user weight is correlated to the priority of the document being requested for prefetching. The higher the user weight, the higher the priority of the document (col. 4, lines 25-28).

Claim 7: For any given hypertext link in the pathfile, the user weight can be changed or updated.

Claim 8: The user can change the user weight. The user can use any logical criteria for setting the weight, including consideration of server characteristics.

Claim 9: An increase in the user weight to a given link indicates an increased value of that link (col. 4, lines 25-28).

Claim 10: The pathfile which defines the prefetch graph derives from the user, who also possesses the local cache (col. 1, lines 37-39). If the local cache is defined as the local hard drive of the user, then the pathfile which defines the prefetch graph would be stored at the local cache.

Claim 11: In selecting the sequence of pages to prefetch, the links having the highest weight value will be selected as the very next web page prefetched, following the initial web page request.

Claim 12: The highest weight is associated with the highest numerical value.

Claim 13: The weights are also compared against a minimum threshold value which is established by the user (col. 2, lines 20-25). Since the user possess the cache, the threshold is associated with the cache.

Claim 14-15: The user can update the weight value based on any logical criteria desired by the user. This may include criteria related to the user's computer or criteria related to the network.

Claims 16-24 are allowed.
